Manager Commentary

Risk-on sentiment remained strong throughout the month. US Treasury's actions—issuing Treasury Bills and spending from the Treasury General Account—added liquidity to support the economy. No changes in debt issuance policy are expected. The Federal Reserve significantly scaled back its Quantitative Tightening program by more than half, as indicated in their last FOMC meeting, further fuelling the risk-on sentiment and contributing to market stability.

Although there are some early signs of weakness in ISM data published after the month end that may help deliver a rate cut in FOMC July's meet, we believe this will be a net positive for risk assets in the near term. Key economic drivers are stable, with PCE inflation nearing the Fed's 2% target. The market expects one or two interest rate cuts this year. Some early labour market weakness is registered in the constituent data. A significant change in unemployment numbers could prompt quicker rate cuts.

The US Presidential election began early with a TV debate between President Biden and Donald Trump, suggesting Trump's possible return in 2025. Biden's potential replacement at the August convention is uncertain. Both candidates plan to expand fiscal deficits by around $6 trillion, with similar impacts. This, and the issuance impacts would mean further liquidity added to the system at the expense of a sharply expanding US debt. China's debt crisis in the property sector remains a problem for the economy in general and for the People's Bank of China, prompting support and potential bailouts. Chinese Yuan's devaluation aims to boost exports of green technology and electric cars, though aggressive tariffs, especially from the US, pose challenges. The data suggests that China has halted copper and gold purchases, which could impact commodity prices.

Japanese equities remain attractive. The Bank of Japan must address the weaker yen. In Europe, populist parties are resurging due to migration and cost of living increase. Despite some insulation, German automakers are hit by reduced Chinese demand. The European Central Bank and others cut rates to stimulate growth.

In the UK, Consumer Prices Inflation fell to the 2% target, though core inflation and high wage settlements persist. Bank of England's Hugh Pill and Governor Bailey are likely to keep interest rates steady until autumn. The upcoming General Election suggests a potential change in government and a potential change in tax and spending approaches.

Portfolios performed well in the first half of the year, driven by US equities. Recent portfolio changes, including higher US and Japan weightings, and lower China and Asia-Pacific weightings, are proving successful. Fixed income allocations are positioned to benefit from expected rate cuts later this year. As summer approaches, portfolios remain well-managed with solid returns.
